Target earned $1.21 a share as revenue fell 1.1% year over year to $10.02 billion. Analysts expected 91 cents per share in earnings and revenue of $15.63 billion. Getty Images The company predicts a for the second quarter of 95 cents to $1.15 per share, with the midpoint above $1 per share analysts expect. For the full year, it forecasts earnings $3.80 to $4.20 a share - the midpoint a penny shy of the $4.01 Wall Street estimate. These numbers look good. However, Target cleared a low bar as investors lowered expectations after disappointing fourth-quarter earnings and guidance and poor holiday sales earlier this year. Furthermore, parts of the quarter apply. Although Target's same-store sales beat the 3.5% decline the street expected, they still fell 1.3% year over year. That's the fourth consecutive quarter of comparable sales declines for Target, which also had a 0.8% decline in transactions and a 0.6% decline in the average transaction amount. The target doesn't see the trend change anytime soon either. For the second quarter and the year, they warned that comparisons would decline with low single digits. Some analysts believe Target can never generate a positive annual comparison again. The target's gross margin shrank 40 basis points to 30.5%, and traffic fell nearly 1% in the quarter, which contained volatile week-to-week trends, according to the company. Earnings per share - 30 cents above expectations - fell more than 6% from a year earlier. The scorecard struck a cautious tone and declined to raise its full-year forecast despite the solid results. It said the quarter increased the likelihood that full-year profit would be above the midpoint of its previous guidance, but it is not confident enough in the continued strength to boost its forecast. Target needs a knockout quarter to fully restore investor confidence given the daunting headwinds. While retailers have been in turmoil for some time, Target looks particularly vulnerable, the pressure between mega-rivals Wal-Mart Stores (WMT) and Amazon.com (AMZN). Target trades at 13.5 times forward earnings, but analysts predict slight profit growth in next year, so there's no reason to rush into the stock. The attractive return, now 4.3%, has done little to limit damage, with stocks delivering a negative 22% total return so far this year. In its conference call, Target said it planned to be cautious about share buybacks. Therefore, the report, even if better than feared, hardly inspires confidence in a turnaround. Investors should trade elsewhere.
